Continuation of 5. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: The Applicant claims that Lumelsky does not consider advertising. However, Lumelsky clearly considers that advertising is part of the content that is possible to send. At the reference to advertising at (col 4, lines 39-44) regardless of whatever transmission format Lumelsky discloses, Lumelsky clearly discloses that content can include promotions and advertising. Additionally, at the reference (col 13, lines 10-20), Lumelsky again discloses that content includes a vast array of content which includes advertising.

In reference to Applicant's amended claims with the new language periodically selecting and playing. . .automatically'. Lumelsky discloses that the user in advance selects categories of interest. When a session is initiated, information in the users field of interest, but the specifics of which the user has no idea, will be transmitted (col 11, lines 6-14). Hence, a session is initiated, and then a variety of new, surprise content is automatically sent based on the fields of interest that the user had established well prior to the session.
